You cannot do better than invest your money in a Hillman

11.9 Four Seater Coupé.

Hillman

MODELS

ADDITIONS to our own drop-forging plant have now enabled us to replace practically all malleable castings on our car with steel stampings made in our own shops, and heat treated to aircraft specifications. The advantage of steel stampings over castings, which are always liable to hidden weaknesses, is universally admitted. In offering what is practically an "ALL STEEL" chassis to the public, we are making a great stride towards what has always been the objective of The Hillman Motor Company—namely, to build the finest car it is possible to make, and to do it at a price that is competitive. It is only by adhering to this policy that we are able to give with all our cars a Guarantee more comprehensive than any other in the Motor Trade.

Quicker
Morning Shaves

SAVE TIME SAVE BLADES

Your only remedy at present to get a quick and velvety shave, if your "safety" blade is dull, is to scrap it and use a new one. Invariably you shave in a hurry. You can't stop fiddling with strops and ordinary sharpening devices which require a deal of patient adjustment and knack of handling. What you really want is an "Allegro"—the entirely new automatic honer and stropper. Designed to be used in a hurry by

ALL GILLETTE AND AUTO-STROP USERS

No knack required. No care, no thought, and no fiddling adjustment. A child can use it, and it puts the only real cutting edge on any state of Gillette or Auto-Strop blade in thirty seconds—all four edges are sharpened at the mathematically correct angle. Without an your razor can never be depended upon as a certainty—the blade may be right or it may be wrong. With the "Allegro" it is always right. Have a perfect shave and a quick shave—every day at 1/12th the cost—get an "Allegro." With it, one blade will last indefinitely, and yet give you the comfort of a new blade every day. You'll save in cash alone, apart from the comfort and convenience. The "Allegro" costs nothing to use. Ask to see it at any Stores, Cutlers, Surgical Instrument makers and Hairdressers. Make a point of seeing it TO-DAY.

"Allegro"
AUTOMATIC HONER & STROPPER

Demonstrations daily at our new Branch Showrooms, 128, Jermyn St., op. Piccadilly Circus Tube

TRY IT FOR SEVEN DAYS FREE

In order that you may realise what a boon the "Allegro" is, we will send you one against cash for seven days to thoroughly try it free of all cost. Should you for any reason not approve it, send it back and we will return your money in full. Send direct or preferably order it through your usual Chemist or Barber.

A famous 'Imshi' Morris Car for 285 guineas

The 11·9 Morris-Cowley Standard Model Car carries a 4-cylinder water-cooled engine and full 'Imshi' chassis.

In both material and design it is better than 'Imshi.' In many parts, for instance, straight carbon steel has been replaced by 3% nickel steel.

Over 120 minor improvements have been made in the design: little troubles such as over-heating of front part of body, &c., have been completely eliminated.

Yet the car is sold at about half the price it fetched—and fetched easily—a year ago. There is NO car of the quality, power and finish that can compare with the Morris in price.

A Morris Car is good for many years of HARD service. An example which has completed over 100,000 miles is to-day in excellent condition.

Experience or Experiment?

Naturally, every purchaser, however small the purchase made, prefers a tried and trusted article to an experiment. The product of a specialist represents the result of many years experience in the manufacture of the speciality, and the purchaser benefits thereby. We specialise in the manufacture of Pearls, and our accumulated experience and expert knowledge produces the realism which makes stand alone, with a world-wide reputation as the most faithful reproductions of Oriental Pearls. Ciro Pearls copy nature—others attempt to copy Ciro's.

Ciro Pearls

OUR UNIQUE OFFER.

On receipt of One Guinea, we will send you a Necklet of Ciro Pearls, 16 inches long, with clasp and case complete, or a Ring, Brooch, Ear-rings, or any other Ciro Pearl Jewel in hand-made gold settings. If, after comparing them with real or other artificial pearls, they are not found equal to the former or superior to the latter, return them to us within fifteen days and we will refund your money. Ciro Pearl Necklets may also be obtained in any length required. We have a large staff of expert pearl stringers.

Could anything be more compact?

The diminutive Decca is the most ingeniously designed gramophone made. There's no waste space anywhere, and every part is of the minimum size yet of unerring efficiency. The patent "Dulciflex" (the bowl-shaped Deflector) serves a double purpose; it deflects and amplifies the sound, and it comfortably houses every Decca component (except the driving power). The gramophone is ready to play immediately opened.

Besides being the most compact, the Decca is also the strongest and the most musical of portable gramophones—of which it is the pioneer. In tone, volume and reproduction it leaves nothing to be desired. When closed, looks just like an ordinary handbag.

BYSTANDER COMMENTS

A Dismal Death Knell

If ever a year went to its grave, or wherever it is that old years go when they die, unwept and unhonoured, it was 1921. Not a single writer of a "Review of the Year" could find a good word to say for it. Of course, we exonerate ourselves from all blame for what befell in 1921. The way in which we personify the year, pack all our own faults upon its back and send it forth as a scapegoat into the wilderness of past time, is absolutely Pagan. So, too, is the way in which we hope that 1922 will be a "good year," just as though we could have nothing to do with it ourselves.

Not 1921's Fault

One may imagine poor old 1921 grumbling to himself, "I did not cherish your squandermaniacs, I am not responsible for all your evils, from strikes to inferior plays. On the contrary, I gave you a wonderful year, a beautiful spring, a lovely summer and autumn, and started you easily on winter. So far as I was concerned every prospect was pleasing, it was only man that was vile."

Good-Bye "Blue Boy"

I went last week to make the acquaintance of, and say good-bye to, one whom the country can ill afford to lose, yet cannot afford to keep—Gainsborough's "Blue Boy," now in the National Gallery. What a pity he cannot remain there! One is apt to fear disappointment on some of these occasions. Many of us, I suspect, if honest, have often said, "Well, I suppose it is everything the cognoscenti claim for it, but really I don't quite see it." But let no one fear disappointment with the "Blue Boy," no one, that is, who has a soul above a photograph of Georges Carpentier kissing his cook, or of the cottage, indicated by an arrow, in which Dr. Spilsbury examined exhumed remains.

The Most Arresting Picture

The "Blue Boy" is one of the most arresting pictures I have seen in any gallery. Everyone who can spare half an hour should make a point of seeing it before it goes. The picture, which, I was told, was very dirty, has been skilfully cleaned by the official cleaner to the National Gallery, and can never have been more beautiful. I envy America the wealth that takes it from us. I am told that of the £200,000 Mr. Huntingdon paid for the "Blue Boy" and the "Tragic Muse," £170,000 was the price of the former. I suppose we must regard it as part of the price of winning the War.

With the Daily "Dail" in Dublin

To me the most pleasing and most hopeful portent vouchsafed during the dreary deliberations of the Daily "Dail" in Dublin was the severe and dignified rebuke administered by Mr. Michael Collins to the Countess Markievicz for her vulgar reference to Princess Mary, and also the manner in which it was received by the meeting. No voice was raised in sympathy with the Countess, and even she was apparently shamed into silence. For the rest, the proceedings have been calculated rather to make one wonder how the Dublin Parliament will manage to get through its business when it starts, unless the "Deputies" will consent to being strictly "rationed" in their rhetoric. The House of Commons has been called the "Talking Shop." In comparison with the "Dail" it might be called

HANDING HIM THE BIRD
(At least, we presume that is the intention)

By D. L. Ghilchik

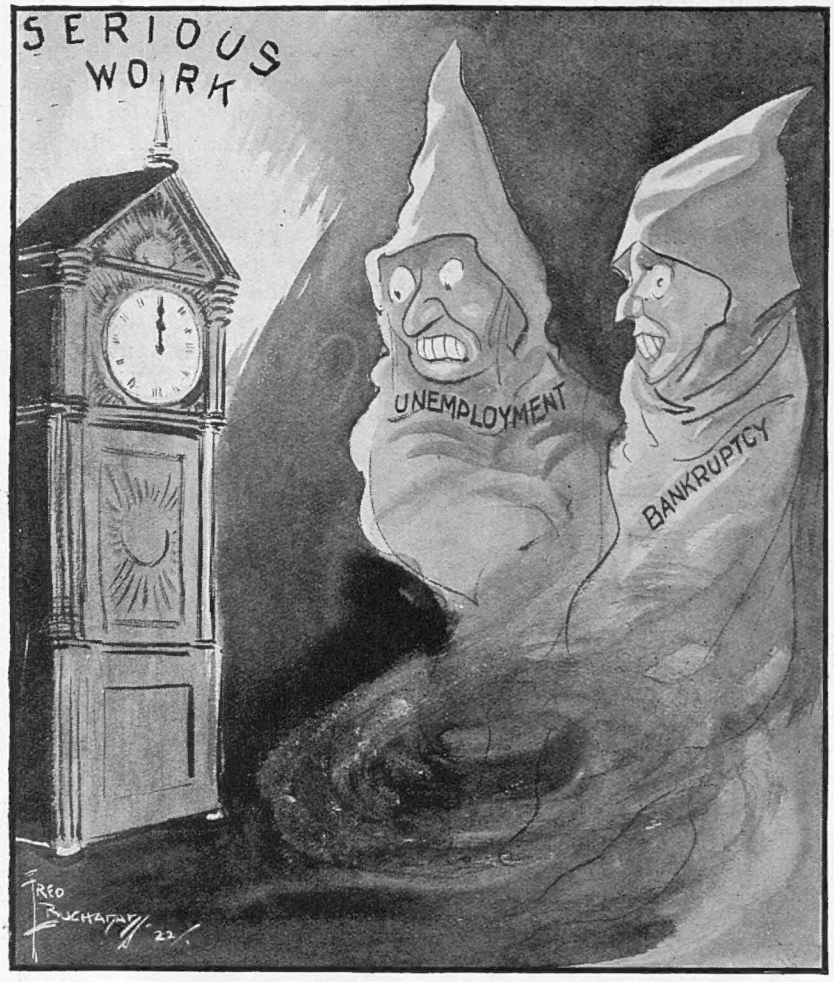
a collection of "silent wives." The reporting staff in the Dublin establishment will be a hard-worked body.

The Will to "Waste"

WHY has yesterday's newspaper ceased to have any value? Time was when people advertised for it, and would come and take it away in their own sacks and carts, and even pay some trifling price for it. But to-day it is a nuisance. One or two papers a day can be used up in even a small household. But if you take half-a-dozen in the morning and four in the evening, it is a difficulty to dispose of them.



THE GHOST SEASON FINISHES — By Fred Buchanan

1st Ghost: "Come on, it's up to us to disappear—the clock is beginning to chime"

The gentlemen who clamour for empty bottles, and who look with disparaging eye at the suit you are wearing when you falsely tell them that you have no "old clothes," will not look at waste paper, however good its condition.

Absolutely Refuse It

THE lordly Borough Dustmen refuse it point-blank. In the country one can burn it. But in a London flat or gardenless house yesterday's newspapers become a problem. A judge the other day suggested that over-taxation was practically forcing people into dishonesty. I am beginning to understand why men may be driven to the awful depths of clipping newspapers in clubs.

Riotous Revelling

HOGMANAY outside St. Paul's, even in its most joyous days of which tradition tells, can never have been but as the primmest of Sunday School parties compared with last New Year's Eve in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and other American cities. Taxi-cabs were converted into travelling bars—later on, one supposes, being used as ambulances for the incapable. Deaths by the dozen from alcoholic poisoning; deeds of violence by whisky-crazed revellers; and the spectacle of drunken young women "of the better class," ushered in the New Year in these great centres of civilization.

Poisonous Pussyfootism

OUR newspapers very generally commented on the fewness of the charges of drunkenness in the police courts after Christmas and New Year. But is it safe to boast that we are better in this respect than our cousins across the Atlantic? Should we not rather be thankful that so far we have been preserved from the hideous and powerful temptations of Prohibition? Long may we continue to avoid following in the Pussyfootsteps of the United States!

The Peerage and the Profesh.

"MISS ——'s performance by any other name would have been as good," wrote a dramatic critic the other day, in noticing the London début of a young actress in a small part. Of course, he meant that whatever her name had been, her performance would have been as good. I agree. But had she not been the daughter of a peer, would our dramatic critic have devoted the whole of his notice, plus a photograph, to the playing and the pedigree of a young lady taking a minor part? I trow not. Nor do I complain. We are all as interested when a scion of the Peerage goes on the Stage, as when a member of the stage enters the Peerage. But we might as well be quite frank about it.

Honours and Horrors

IF 1922 goes on as it has begun, the Chamber of Horrors at Madame Tussaud's will be uncomfortably crowded before midsummer, or some of our old friends will have to be moved to make room for the newcomers. This would be rather a pity. Madame Tussaud's Honours Lists are always very carefully chosen. I cannot think of anyone having been included whose selection has not been universally approved by the public. Madame's advisers know their business thoroughly.

BYSTANDER COMMENTS (concluded)

The Distressful Country

In view of the recent developments in Ireland, it is rather significant that the spring bookings from the distressful country to America are unusually large. These intending emigrants have now received a shock in the shape of notices posted in Cork, forbidding emigration without the written permission of the Republican Government. Evidently a certain popular ballad calls for revision :

FORSWEARING O' TH' GREEN

Oh, Paddy, dear, we meant to clear
Across the ocean blue,
But now they say we've got to stay
And see the matter through.
Sure, 'tis a more distressful country
Than it has ever been,
They'll be hanging men and women for
Not wearing of the green.

Nothing Else Would Do

Sir Charles Hawtrey is much too good a sportsman to mind this little story against himself. "Have you heard that Hawtrey has refused a knighthood?" asked a well-known clubman on New Year's Eve. "You don't say so! Why?" gasped his companion. "Says he won't be satisfied with anything less than a bankruptcy," was the reply—and together they drank the jolly good health of that jolly good fellow whose acting at the Criterion has become the criterion of good acting.

HAVING NO HONOURS

I'm not a Peer! No fear!
A Peer! No blooming fear!
I was lucky! I was missed
When they published the Honours List.
I went for a trip into Kent,
And stayed a week in Dover;
I took good care to stop down there
Till the danger had quite blown over!

Our Best Fiction Writer

Who is our best short story-writer? Meeting Percival Gibbon at the London Sketch Club the other evening I was able to tell him that he had that day been so described in my hearing. A few hours later I was assured that Gibbon couldn't hold a candle to Conrad, and now I am told that in his new book, The Trembling of a Leaf, Somerset Maugham has got them both beaten. Probably, however, others would claim that the palm for fiction should go to H. G. Wells, in view of those Washington despatches.

PURE FICTION

Maugham, Conrad, and Gibbon
All claim the Blue Riband
For writing short stories to-day :
But Wells has been writing
Some really exciting
And full-blooded fiction, they say.

Educational Acrobats

There are three things that everybody can do better than anybody else, and the third of these is to train up a child in the way he should go. Education is an engrossing problem, and my sympathies are all with the gentleman who is now attacking those "servile virtues" with which young students are sedulously crammed. "What becomes of the clever boys who carry off all the prizes?" asks this Bolshevistic pedagogue, to which query Echo dutifully answers "What?" And now comes Mrs. E. Nesbit with the pretty suggestion that poetry might be less sparingly used in the modern curriculum. Boy! Fetch me my harp :

Katherine of Aragon
Was hardly a paragon ;
Anne Boleyn
Was soon done in——

WHO, WHEN & WHERE

BY THE BYSTANDER IN SOCIETY

A Princely Gift

WAS there ever a more princely gift than the clubhouse Lord Cowdray has given to the Royal Air Force Club? The old Lyceum Club, in Piccadilly, has been transformed into a palace and a whole block of buildings behind it have been taken in for squash racquets courts. There will be seventy bedrooms, so the Air Force people will be far better off than most clubs.

The sum Lord Cowdray has expended upon the club is £345,000, and of the Club itself he telegraphed from Dunecht, where he and Lady Cowdray have been having a large family party, "I have given it with thankfulness and pride. Their (the Air Force) unsurpassed achievements in the Great War demand our grateful recognition, and in providing the clubhouse I have endeavoured to give effect to my personal devotion and admiration." Memorable words, these.

I remember during the early summer days of the Lyceum Club the indignant comments from the tops of buses from passengers who spied rows of empty glasses standing on the balustrades of the balconies, "A woman's club, and public drinking!" "Disgraceful!" "What an example!" etc.

But the glasses had contained nothing stronger than lemonade or soda-water. People are so apt to leap to conclusions.

Sir Gerald and Sir Charles

IT really begins to look as if you are certain of a knighthood if you have been an actor-manager for a certain number of years, but nobody will grudge Sir Gerald du Maurier or Sir Charles Hawtrey their New Year honours. The two new creations, and the death of Sir John Hare, make six actor knighthoods — Sir Squire Bancroft, Sir Johnson Forbes-Robertson, Sir Frank Benson, Sir John Martin Harvey, or seven if you include Sir Harry Lauder—not an overpowering number when you consider the size of the profession and all that it does for the public.

The entrance of my Lord Bishop of Exeter into the House of Lords creates an interesting little fact in history. He is a son of the late Marquis of Salisbury, so now all the four surviving sons of that great politician are in Parliament, the reigning Marquis and his Bishop brother in the Lords and Lord William and Lord Hugh Cecil in the Commons.

Political Hostesses and Their Troubles

THE announcement that a huge Coalition evening party is to be held at Devonshire House gives colour to the general opinion that the political hostess is rapidly becoming extinct.

Two things weigh heavily against a woman who has ambitions in that direction. The first is the cohorts of people covered by the word "political," and the consequent numbers of invitations which must be issued unless serious harm is to be done by "giving offence." Here comes in a question of expense, and even your very rich aspirants to political influence have to think twice, if not three times, before they launch out invitations to, say, three thousand people—the number, it is said, who are to be bidden to Devonshire House.

The second point is that the big squashes into which "political" parties have now resolved themselves do not bring any return to the host and hostess commensurate to the trouble and expense involved. In the days when everything was on a much smaller scale a political hostess could help her party. Many lukewarm or wavering folk among the lesser sort could be "roped in" by being asked to meet the great and coroneted. It gave them a sense of importance. Personal introductions were possible, and increased the sense of importance.

But now, when the lukewarm and the wavering find themselves insignificant units amongst several hundreds of other people, their only glimpse of the great and coroneted over rows of shoulders, and their only word to their hostess, the "How d'ye do?" when they are announced — well, they go away still lukewarm and wavering. In some cases they retire absolutely antagonistic if husband and wife have not met a soul they know and have had to entertain each other all the evening. And this happens very frequently at these big squashes.

It will cost a pretty penny to provide even light refreshments for the three thousand at Devonshire House. I wonder who will pay the bill, and likewise for the hire of the old house, which used to be the scene of real political parties when Louise, Duchess of Devonshire, pulled the Unionist strings.

How can the cleverest of hostesses introduce a promising and rising young man upon whom "an eye should be kept" to Cabinet Ministers and the powerful of the party amongst a chaos of three thousand people? She would have to spend her whole evening in finding the young man or the Ministers. No, politics in the mass help neither the political hostess nor her guests.

"The Meanest Lot"

A NEWLY ennobled one and his wife were anxious to settle in a "good neighbourhood" in the country, but, being children of wisdom, decided to take a furnished house to see if they liked the locality before embarking upon purchase.

A suitable house was found—nothing easier, alas! in these days—and my Lady motored down to inspect. Now, my Lady was of that type of woman whom her friends call "homely," and her enemies call "plain." She was shown over the house by the housekeeper. Ultimately they came to the kitchen. The cook was most obliging and friendly. She explained the idiosyncrasies of the range—how to woo the hot water or the ovens—showering masses of kitchen detail upon my Lady.

The housekeeper went to the other end of the kitchen to speak to a servant. Lowering her voice the cook said to my lady:

"I hope you'll be able to come in soon. This is the meanest lot I've ever struck, and that's saying a good deal! I don't expect you'll be able to stand it for more than your month. I haven't."

"Little Norkins"

SPEAKING of cooks, it is amusing how often their unofficial "in-gatherings"—in the kitchen, I believe, they are described as "little norkins"—are brought to light by chance or accident. Four new stones in a stone-paved hall of a London house have just brought to light this little history.

When the family are in residence the centre of the hall is covered with rugs. The family have been in the country since September. Husband and wife came up for a few days shopping before Christmas, but the house was left under dust-sheets, and, of course, the rugs in the hall were left rolled up at the sides.

Directly they entered the house both husband and wife noticed four new slabs of stone in the very centre of the hall, startlingly, aggressively new slabs. And this, if you please, was the result of their enquiries.

As is usual in the majority of big London houses, all heavy luggage in this particular mansion has to be taken through the front door. Last September the whole household went to the country house. Prior to their departure all the luggage was collected from the various rooms and stacked in the hall in readiness for the van that was to take it to the railway station. Now, the chef had put his bags and boxes upon the top of two barrels standing outside the kitchen door. The barrels were taken to be part of his belongings and duly carried upstairs and placed with the other luggage in the hall.

The day was hot; the night was hotter still; the luggage was not taken to the station until the following day. Just before the van arrived the chef

REFLECTIONS . . . .

Mr. Lloyd George crosses a stream on the Cannes Golf Course while recuperating previous to the Conference, which opened on Friday came upstairs, evidently much perturbed by the disappearance of his two barrels. He was delighted when he saw them standing in the hall—it was all a mistake, he explained—they were not to go. But when they were moved two large grease stains were discovered on the stone floor. The barrels contained dripping, of which the day and night's heat had taken heavy toll!

Picture the chef's dismay! How it was managed the owners of the house were not able to discover—obviously there must have been some collusion with other servants—but the chef had the four damaged stones taken up and replaced at his own cost!

Under ordinary circumstances the change would never have been seen. The owner of the house argued that if the chef could go to the expense of replacing the stones his place carried more profit than his wages, an opinion in which he was confirmed by the further discovery that the barrels contained three hundredweight of dripping and were "called for" the day after the chef and the other servants had gone to the country. So, in addition to their Christmas shopping, the owners of that house had to look out for a new chef.

Another little history I heard recently of the doings of some chefs was in a big house in the Highlands. The staff of servants was not an especially large one. Four daughters of the house had been there for a month; then they were joined by their father and mother. For the next three weeks the family was alone—no guests. But the house books disclosed the astonishing fact that the chef had used two hundred and fifty eggs a week during the month's residence of the daughters, and that the arrival of their parents had sent the number up to three hundred and fifty a week.

There was an immediate vacancy for another chef.

And Mrs. Satterthwaite walking to the courts for the Monte Carlo Tournament

On New Year's Eve there were 450 diners at the Café de Paris, besides the hundreds at the opening night of the Restaurant des Ambassadeurs, where the famous cook from the "Normandie" at Deauville (who receives, I believe, the trifling retaining fee of £2,000!), and many more at the Hôtel de Paris, and Ciro's, etc. The old standard at Ciro's is worthily maintained and many distinguished habitués of the Riviera were there assembled, including some large parties of Americans. At some of the dancing and dining-places prices vary considerably. At one, champagne (not properly cooled because the supply of ice had failed, it was said) cost 80 francs, while at another the charge for an equally good or better bottle "frappé" was 65 francs. The charge for a dancing lesson for an hour at the same place is 200 francs, while at others it is 100 francs, and, of course, often much less. The public will soon discriminate. It is this sort of thing, which is to be found occasionally at all fashionable resorts nowadays, that gives a place a bad name which is not merited, especially at Monte Carlo, where the hotel keepers for the most part are notably reasonable.

At the Ambassadeurs, among the diners were: Mr. and Mrs. Marion Crawford, Miss Doris Chapman, Mrs. and Miss Furth, M. and Mme. Terrien, Mr. Chauncey, Comtesse de Bourbel, Mr. and Mrs. Barstow (Baroness Orczy), Mr. Hodgkins and party, Mrs. Goldenberg, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Fox, Major Bryce, Viscomtesse Freda des Garets, Baronne de Hardenbrock, Mrs. Satterthwaite, Captain Hillyard, Lord Dewar, Sir Walter and Lady de Frece, Sir Francis and Lady Towle and Miss Towle, Marquis Sarnelli, Mr. and Mrs. Dearborn, Mr. Sofio, M. The Hôtel des Iles d'Ors—famous for its dances and classical concerts—at Hyères, and others there and at Costabelle, are having a very good season, and there is much animation on the golf course, and at the tennis and croquet grounds. Also much dancing and bridge, not to mention baccarat, etc. The prices are distinctly moderate.

Many well-known golfers were to be seen at the dance at Orestes last week. I noticed Lieut.-General Sir John Du Cane, Brig.-General Aspinall, Mr. Myrom Herrick and his son, Major Pollitt, the Grand Duc Demitrie, Major Bryce, Major Steele, Mr. Hugh Coghlan, Sir Ellis Hume Williams, Lord Waleran, Brig.-General Brewin, Mr. Schindler (vice-President of the New York Rotary Club), Lord Nunburnholme, the Craven boys, Mr. FitzGeorge, Captain Chadwick, Mr. Chauncey, Comte de Bourbel, Mr. James Colfelt, Hon. Reginald Coke, Mr. de Grecff, and many others. Orestes was packed by 200 happy holiday-makers. The fun and some of the frocks were fast and furious.

The first Riviera lawn tennis tournament of the season finished at Monte Carlo on January 1. meeting took place, and some fine play was much enjoyed by small, but appreciative, galleries. The green matting round the courts has made the background admirable. Lord Rocksavage has distinctly advanced by defeating Captain Hillyard (after losing the first two sets) in the final by 2—6, 2—6, 6—3, 6—4, 6—3. M. de Becker, a Belgian newcomer, should improve rapidly. He did well to beat Mr. Marion Crawford, who has been holding the cracks in practice lately, but dancing too late to do himself justice. M. Gallépe, for France, is a fine player with a great variety of strokes and great facility with the half-volley. Mrs. O'Neil played well against the winner of the ladies'—Mrs. Satterthwaite—and was only beaten 7—5, 6—3. The American lady—Mrs. Cabot—who has at one time or another beaten all the best American ladies, did not get many games from the winner, but had tremendous rallies, and evoked much applause. Lord Rocksavage and Mrs. O'Neil won a set in the mixed final against Captain Hillyard and Mrs. Satterthwaite.

MEN AND MODES

BY "BOW WINDOW"

Cucullus non facit monachum, which for the benefit of any of my readers who do not happen to be classical scholars, may be translated: "'Tis not the cowl that makes the monk." Nevertheless, every man goes through a period in his life when what he wears is a matter of supreme importance to him. I remember that at the age of eight I wanted, above all things, a pair of button boots.

THE peacock phase—by which I mean the period when it brings misery to a man to feel he is presenting a less fine appearance than his fellows—is of varying duration. Some men preserve it always. I know an old gentleman who fought (I understood him to say) at Balaclava, who to this day will never walk down Piccadilly in anything except a top hat. There is to me something rather dignified and attractive in what irreverent youth calls an old beau. With many men the day when what they put on matters to them soon passes. They no longer care whether they have one stripe or two down their evening trousers; the number of studs in their dress shirts is a matter of indifference to them; they groan at having to put on a top hat to go to a wedding or a Sunday lunch. Such, if bachelors, often degenerate into untidy old men. But if married, curiously enough, the most casual of men generally remain neat. Why? Because their womenfolk insist on their taking care of their appearance. Which brings me to an important point in my dissertation.

THE other day a lady complained to me that a man, who was one of an informal party at her house, refused to go on to supper at a fashionable dancing club because he was wearing a dinner jacket. "Aren't men silly? Aren't they vain?" she said.

OF course, times have changed since the War, though the tail-coat and white waistcoat are almost re-established for all that. But I could have assured that good lady that ten years ago the average young man, with any claims to Beau Brummellism, would not have gone with her even to a theatre in a dinner-jacket, and would rather have tarred and feathered himself than escorted her to a dance so dressed.

IT is you, my lady readers, who are responsible for our modes. We may be vain, as you say. We may be "cuff and collary" to a degree that makes you say we are ridiculous. But it is you who make us so. What but the fear of losing your favour makes us shave so carefully a second time before going to a dance. The lord knows it is no pleasure in this cold weather to scrape a razor twice in the same day over a chapped chin. But if we don't, what happens? We scrape——

HOWEVER, as I was saying, it is the ladies who are responsible for our modishness. A very beautiful leader of feminine fashion has written an article in a contemporary saying that men are vainer than women. She says that in the early days of our Island history we put woad on ourselves not for the delectation of the damsel we had carried to our cave, but to take the shine out of one another. She calls us incredibly conceited, more occupied with the matching of our ties and socks, than the problems of Ireland or the Pacific.

IN reply I will content myself with asking only one question. Who takes most time to dress for dinner, and who lingers longest in the cloakrooms of theatres and restaurants—man or woman?

POETS & POETRY

BY THOMAS JAY

About once every now and then one of those gentlemen with an intellect so powerful that it makes a buzzing noise as he walks along tells us that poets are born, not made. So far nobody has had the courage to tell us why they are born, yet there is good news in the report that a newspaper written entirely in verse has been started at Athens.

It has been said, rightly or wrongly, that most young men write poetry with a wealth of thought, which is just as well, for only disappointment would follow if they entered the realms of poetry with a thought of wealth.

The writer of poetry is to be admired for his moral courage, and we have the word of Mr. Justice Darling that he himself writes poetry as a hobby, thus differing from those of us who do it for spite.

I well remember, in my own case, that I started writing poetry at a very early age. My father, quite rightly, took the opinion of a man who knew, and asked him what should be done about it. He advised my proud parent to take me to a doctor, because a piece of bone might be pressing on the brain.

My first poem was most successful. I wrote it about a rich uncle who was staying with us at the time, and just when I came to the last line in the fifteenth verse, which read, "Don't put my Uncle's Whiskers up for Sale," my father came along. He very kindly invited me to his study, where he interviewed me about my poetry, and I can assure you that I was never more impressed by an interview than I was by that one. I was so impressed that I stood at meals for several days. It may have been most impolite, but, believe me, I preferred it that way.

However, to the beginner, poetry-writing is fairly easy and a good plan is to follow the old masters.

Take the late Mr. Wordsworth, for instance. You will remember how he tramped across the moors of Cumberland . . . he might have taken a bus, of course, but he had gone out without any money in his pocket, being a poet—and there he met the cottager's pretty daughter—and, of course, he wrote a poem about her.

Always write from real life, of course. Some poets write about the skylarks in December, and I can only suppose that they are working on last season's skylark—or, perhaps, they keep a stuffed skylark in their drawing-room as a sort of stand-by.

And one other thing the poet must have. He must have a soul. Everybody will tell you that a poet must have a soul. No matter where he gets it, he must get it somehow; why, one friend of mine has a very big soul indeed—I think it was made for a bigger man—and he told me that he bought it off a poet who was going out of the business and was entering some useful occupation like plumbing or being a Cabinet Minister.

The poet must also have the artistic temperament, for this covers a multitude of sins. If you see a poet wearing several overdue shaves that is the artistic temperament. If you see the same man with a clean face, a starched collar, and he borrows half a crown from you, that is the artistic temperament also. In short, the artistic temperament can do almost anything except go to work.

The artistic temperament is ordering a glass of milk and a biscuit when the soul cries to heaven for a Porterhouse steak, chips, two sweets, and a bottle of Bass. The poet should only write on one side of the paper. Any editor will tell you which is the right side of the paper to write on.

QUITE INCOMPARABLE

BY ENID BLYTON

"Here, guard," shouted a pompous-looking individual in the train.

The guard hurried up.

"I'm going to Crewe," announced the passenger, "but I'm dead sleepy, and I want you to wake me up there, see?"

"Right, sir," answered the guard. Something passed from hand to hand.

"Never mind if I yell at you a bit for waking me up," continued the passenger. "I never like being woken, but I must be, for if I pass Crewe I shall miss an important appointment—a most important appointment," he affirmed, impressively.

"Right, sir," repeated the guard, slamming the door.

The pompous man arranged himself comfortably, covered himself with a rug, and sank back with a sigh of content, and soon he was giving vent to long drawn-out snores.

When he opened his eyes again they rested on a snow-covered mountainous countryside. He sat bolt upright in amazement. The train presently drew into a long station, and the man dazedly read "Glasgow" on the platform boards.

He jumped out of the carriage, and made for the guard in a fury. A crowd gathered round in admiration of his vocabulary. The guard listened in rapt attention, nodding his head in enjoyment of various adjectives.

"Aw," he said, at last, "you're fine, man—but ye're no to be compared with the man ah put out at Crewe!" E. B.

When Phyllis flies into the ring
How wonderful the thrill is,
Forward she plays upon the wing
(She always was a forward thing).
No half-back play for Phyllis.

Swiftly her foot the ball has biffed
(Oh, what would grandma-ma say ?)
She always was a trifle swift ;
Her passing is a special gift,
Although she is not passée.

But now she's called on to refrain
(In other words to chuck it.)
For football soon may be her bane
And Phyllis must not kick again,
For fear she kicks the bucket.

Though docs. bann football for the fair
And strive thus to alarm her,
I feel their views I do not share
For when the Sales are in the air
I've seen my fragile Phyllis wear
A dogged look of 'do and dare' ;
I've seen her dash across the square
And fight with frenzy of despair
For bargains rich (and cheap) and rare
At one-eleven-three a pair ;
For these she'll climb the highest stair
And scratch and bite and rip and tear
The clothes of other females there . .
All this she does, nor turns a hair
And so I solemnly declare
That football will not harm her !

COOK and CARPENTIER IN TRAINING

A Woman's Visit to the Two Camps

BY MARION CRAN

ILLUSTRATED BY PHYLLIS KERMODE

I WAS to go to see Carpentier in his training quarters at Maidenhead, and write of what effect his efforts made upon the female mind. The job appeared to be a cheery one on the face of it, seeing I had surveyed the gallant's handsome visage time and oft in the newspapers, always wreathed in engaging smiles; and had observed him, too, on the films and once in the flesh, making pleased obeisance to the uproarious cheering of enthusiastic crowds. I pictured the genial fellow cultivating his brawn amid the idyllic surroundings of the "mansion" by the river, "with superb gymnasium complete," which imaginative reporters had already described in several papers, and faced a long cross-country journey in a leaky old car through the rain and mud without concern; suffering, indeed, a certain amount of envy from those who were not to be privileged to see this popular idol at close range.

I found a bleak house in an avenue of houses, and a rather bleak welcome. But the gymnasium is all right. It is a large place, with one or two pear-shaped balls hanging from the ceiling, a stand fitted with sliding ropes, and a white canvas-carpetted ring with padded corners. A young man was revolving therein around the fists of a short fat man, and they were—I learned—the famous gladiator and his chef, Battling Marco.

I do not think Carpentier cares for training; it seems to make him peevish, and he had communicated his gloom to the sprinkling of spectators shivering around the walls. The only smile I saw in the melancholy entourage was upon the face of Harry Drake, who took Marco's place in due course, and plunged laughing into the champion's grim embrace as if he thought it a joke. Perhaps our Gallic friends take le sport more seriously than Englishmen. Certainly the little dark man, who was pointed out in an awed whisper as Monsieur Deschamps, Carpentier's manager, was serious to the verge of ill-temper. He dominated the ceremony with a kind of angry industry; bustling to and fro, and snapping at everyone. Maybe success is but a "mouldy mess-mate," after all! A nerve-wracking companion which the many who miss her are better without.

Presently Georges Carpentier came nearer to where I sat, and I watched him closely while he punched one of the pear-shaped balls; he looked morose, like a spoiled child doing lessons when he wanted to play; after pulling the ropes on the aforesaid stand for a while, he attired himself in an elegant sky-blue dressing-gown, and made off joyously to his bath. All that one had dreamed of a debonair Frenchman—gay and gallant, charming, world-famous, challenging and brilliant, was lacking in the man here; but perhaps I had struck a bad day. Completely disillusioned as to the pleasant lines in which the lives of fighting men are set, I reflected miserably that the morrow would find me in just such another chilly atmosphere, when I must search out Cook, the Australian, in his Essex camp, and watch him likewise tread the mill of toil. There is nothing I hate so much in the world as seeing people bored, and being bored seeing them bored.

Remote on a wind-swept, tree-set hill I ran my man to earth, and the first impression was that of the contrast between the austere, clean beauty of his environment and the flashy unrepose of the fashionable riverside town in which his rival trains; it made one realise of a sudden that the two personalities which are to meet in Homeric combat on the 12th, before the eyes of the whole world, have chosen each his camp-pitch according to the past that has moulded him. The man of cities and of crowds, sophisticated and aware, accustomed to the surge and exaction of great populations, has retired to Maidenhead to train his body and rest his nerves; the man of the lonely places, son of the backwoods, who knows the sound of tree and wind and singing stars better than the voices of his fellow-creatures, has taken himself to the quiet woodland reaches where he is most at home.

Except for the gymnasium, which looked exactly like Carpentier's, I found this difference extended to every detail of my visit to the Australian's camp. Laughing and sweating he pounded and was pounded by Lloyd, his sparring partner, till the call of "Time" brought him to me . . . rough, simple, kind, to give a word of welcome . . . returning at once to skip an orgy of fantastic steps with a magic rope which he used as the lightest and swiftest of partners.

He is quite different to the petted French boy, with none of his grace of body; heavily muscled, a shorter man, heavy featured, unattractive till one meets the frank brow and pleasant, wistful eyes. His charm lies in an utter absence of affectation; there is no self-consciousness in him, and he does not pose.

A little, very alive, man came up, and he introduced him as his manager, Mr. Lucas. Again I became aware of a dominant personality—quick, sharp, hot-hearted, full of intelligence; there is a logical, bitterly determined will knit with his fiery temper, which makes the man himself aside from his protégé an interesting study. In the light of him I gained a new glimpse of the remote, peculiar fighting world. It is as if these big fighting-men, with their trained fists, require an element of dominance—as if their queer half-thwarted lives need a strong directing driver, like high-powered cars.

I do not know the supreme manager of all this crowd, Major Wilson, but he must have special qualities of his own, seeing it is his lively task to guide all this difficult traffic through the narrow mazes of public goodwill.

There is nothing irritable or tense about Cook's camp. He works in an atmosphere of protective friendliness, completely boyishly at ease. Lucas took me away for a chat and cup of tea while the lad went off to get his bath and rubbing.

"You don't fuss," I said, gratefully toasting at the fire.

"No need to," he answered, "Cook is a clean liver, and he is happy in his hope."

He told me stories of men and fights; strange battling lore full of male wisdom and technical terms, new to my unlettered ears.

"It'll be like Armistice night again in Sydney when they get the news!" said the axeman of New South Wales, coming in on our chat, groomed and neat. He was gleefully cracking a brace of eggs into a tumbler, his eyes shining at the creature comfort of food after his hard work in the gym.

My mind sped back to the blue sea and sky, the sunshine and the flowers of his native land—that lovely, lonely land, golden with wattle, sweet with honey-drip of eucalyptus blooms.

"You will wear the stars of the Southern Cross at the fight?" I asked.

"I'll wear that flag on one side and the Union Jack on the other; we are all British," said the Australian champion.

I. "The Babes in the Wood" at the New Oxford Theatre

THERE is a legend that a truthful man was once asked if he could play the violin. His answer was that he could not say because he had never tried. Mr. Chas. B. Cochran must be a man of that sort. He had never tried to produce pantomime, but as soon as he puts his hand to the work he gives us a pantomime of greater distinction than London has seen for many years. All the old traditions are scrupulously respected, but through them all there runs that little vein of unusual refinement that is characteristic of Mr. Cochran's work. But I suppose after you have been a showman and an organiser of prize fights for the best part of a lifetime you probably do get to know something that the other man has missed. So that now, if paterfamilias does not take the children to see "Where the Toys come from." and they get wind of the show from other sources, he may be pretty sure there will be a bit of a fight, and that he will get the worst of it.

THE DOLLY SISTERS

THE Wicked Uncle is played by Mr. Albert Bruno, who would seem to justify the remark of the bard that a man may smile and smile and still be a villain. He is one of the jolliest old sinners you could wish to meet, and, of course, nobody really believes that he wishes the kids any harm. Perhaps it is for that reason that in engaging murderers to do the children in he selects two of the most incompetent men in the trade. Mr. George Hassell and Mr. Tubby Edlin are all right as humorists, but they do not appear to know the rudiments of a good sensational murder. When the critical moment has come they try to evade the messy part of their job by offering the children rat-poison, or something fatal like that. The traditional duel between the two, of course, takes place, but the brisk sword-fighting, which is uproariously funny, gradually degenerates into a Highland reel for two. It then becomes clear to Mr. Tubby Edlin that the sword-play must end sooner or later in a draw, and as a plain, practical man, therefore, he just does the plain, practical thing. He picks up a navvy's hammer and hits his rival on the head, thus settling the question of superior skill once and for all.

JENNIE and Rosie Dolly are something more than charming as the Babes, named on the programme as Douglas and Mary. (I understand that these are the names of two people in real life associated with what is known as the "film" industry. It may well be so.) The Dolly Sisters play the weepy end of their parts with a nice restraint, especially at the point at which they are about to be covered with leaves by the robins. But in their lighter scenes they are quite daintily funny. There is a nice rich humour in the idea that when they learn that they are to be killed they refuse to be a party to any such frivolity. They absolutely decline to be murdered; and it looks for the moment as if someone will have to go and fetch the prompter to explain to the ladies that they cannot be allowed to trifle with a time-honoured legend in this way.

BUT the rich, fruity humour of the show is provided by Mr. A. W. Baskcomb as an elderly dame of the name of Louise, who is engaged as governess to the Babes, and afterwards does her best to protect them. Mr. Baskcomb's song, "There You Are, Then!" is already, I believe, among the immortals; and from first to last there is a mellow quality about his fun which connoisseurs will recognise as the real thing. The Babes in the Wood is an ideal entertainment for the children, and their middle-aged uncles, and, while interesting and enjoyable from first to last, it strikes a rather higher note in pantomime than is usual, a detail that will be attractive to all who have the responsibility on their hands of the very young and green.

II. "Jack and the Beanstalk" at the London Hippodrome

IN this pantomime Mr. George Robey takes the part of a woman "for the first time in his West End career." I don't know whether you would call him a soubrette, or a Saucy Puss, but there he is, leaving behind him streaks of laughter that seem to dig holes in the atmosphere. He is Dame Trot, the mother of Jack, and one of his earliest outbreaks is the conscientious attempt to milk a cow that is imperfectly constructed for such a delicate operation. Mr. Robey's song, "See What I Mean?—Why, of course!" is alone worth the price of admission, and the Dame's attempt to wring a proposal of marriage from an impecunious King is very choice humour indeed. One of Mr. Robey's happiest scenes is made up of cross-talk with a little lady called Kiddy Kennedy, a child who looks to be about ten years old, and who, I understand, really is the juvenile she looks. For her delight Mr. Robey runs off the little rhyme about Jack Horner who sat in the corner. Kiddy Kennedy is a preternaturally solemn young lady, and it is with a set and almost blank look upon her face that she shows Mr. Robey the ridiculous inconsistencies of the nursery rhyme. If laughter is good for the health, the Hippodrome ought to join the ranks of the other advertising patent medicines. I could give it a testimonial for a start.

THE principal boy is Miss Clarice Mayne, who has a gentle presence for the part, and whose singing has for some years had a wide popularity of its own. Miss Mayne, besides, brings rather more than the usual acting ability to her part, which has probably never before been taken by an actress of such all-round talent. It is a pleasure to recognise this lady's intelligent interpretation of a character that is so often merely insipid and inane. Miss Madge Saunders, as Jack's sweetheart, is another lady of charm and experience, and the result is that when these two are singing duets, as lovers in pantomime sometimes will, the entertainment reaches a very high level of excellence indeed.

MR. JAY LAURIER is a very acceptable addition to the humorous side of the show. His outstanding joke is to dress another performer for a part while the show is proceeding. Thus a grave, and highly qualified gentleman comes on the stage to sing "Bandolero" in ordinary morning costume. This is not to Mr. Laurier's taste at all, and while the song is proceeding in a magnificent and chesty manner he runs off in search of accessories that will give the singer the right kind of atmosphere. As the song proceeds, Mr. Laurier even runs round to the front of the house and sits among us so that he may judge of the artistic effect of his work from the stalls. Every little addition brings laughter and applause of its own, till at the end the morning costume has been transformed while you wait into the fierce get-up of a reckless Spanish brigand.

THE Cow, represented by the Penders, is quite a remarkable piece of work, and acts its part most convincingly. I should think the Penders must be qualified to perform the alleged impossible feat of making a silk purse out of the least likely material. The Penders, later on, distinguish themselves in the Giant industry, and prove very valuable assets to the entertainment. There are many ingenious innovations in the scenery, and some quaint dances by children, which all add to the delight of a most successful entertainment.

MES AMIS—

Is it not that the greatest joy of to write the letters is to receive them? I mean that it is the receiver who has the whip end of the stick all of the time. Thus am I in the more delight when to get a letter from mes amis because it is I who have to write the most. Well, it is recently that I have sustained the utmost of the surprise. I had not the belief that one has possessed the so great credit. But now I have the surety that the confidence of mes amis—to be the more correct, mes amies—is supreme. For it is not only that I have received a letter to charm, but also with it a blank cheque made out to my name. It does sound beyond the belief, is it not, in these days of the mistrust and the mishaps? But if there is any of the scepticism I shall ask the Monsieur Asa, who has made the delicious photographs of the Riviera, to take a long-exposure of my cheque. For it is safely ensconsed in a frame. One has not the heart to part from a testimonial of such sort.

OF course, I would not have you to think that it has been intended as an honorarium. Not anything so mundane. It has been a cheque with which to execute a commission. And there has been the additional reward to have a second letter to say that the trustful amies have garnered just the delight for which they have sought the aid. It is, perhaps, because of what one has written about the theatres of Paris. There have been two of mes amies who have wished to see the spectacles. As they have lived in the far-away north of the English isle they have had the little timidity about a first visit to Paris and a doubt over the choice of the theatre. So they have sought the advice by the post. One has pictured them beside the little table to write, with the Waterman all ready for the task; and the repeated question, "What is to be done about it?" Then suddenly has been the inspiration, which, perhaps, I have the most appreciated, "Let's write to Roland about it." And so one has had delivered the letter by the next post—for in this season of the étrennes the facteur has the gift to hustle.

THERE has not, bien entendu, been the surprise to be asked the advice. When one has been already solicited for the informations about the fashions in the corsets, one is prepared for any sorts of the inquiries. But there has been the unusualness of the blank cheque. It is not many persons who have the habit to receive the blank cheque, except upon the stage. I have not the fear to confess it is the first to me. The little note which has accompanied has explained that the two amies would like the stalls at a theatre which I could recommend, if it is not asking a too much favour. Why, of course not. As they have written that they have the particular wish to see an exceptional display of the pretty frocks to the accompaniment of the gay music, one has booked them the seats for the Casino de Paris. And one has had the satisfaction to be informed after the event that it has been just what was desired. One has had the fear that, when to see the performance, they might have been a little shocked and say, "They would call this naughty at home." But there have been not any reproaches of the sort. A great relief. Of course, there is the progress in these matters which one has not realised when one has not paid the visit to England for the long time.

"Let's write to Roland about it"

THERE is just now another of the surprises, but this is not in any degree of the personal. It is that the well-filled cellar can be a source of the sorrow. That has the suggestion of the impossible, n'est-ce pas? Yet it is of the most tearfully true. And it has reference to the cellars of champagne, of all the gaiety creating wines! That is the feature to most amaze. One has learned, on the authority the most official, that the cellars of the growers in the districts of the Marne do become so full that there is no spaces to pack in any more. To those persons who have not any interest in the champagne except to drink, it should seem the matter to rejoice. And it is not, of course, they who do intone the laments. The dirges have been wailed by the growers. They recall that it is not for the cellars of themselves that they do produce the most joyous wine of all France, but for the cellars of us others. That is most unselfish, is it not? And one would wish to show the appreciation of such thoughtfulness on our behalf. If it should not be for the return compliment which is involved. Which is the price of the nectar. There are two culprits to be blamed for that. One is the profiteers in the boites de nuit and the other is the State, which has imposed the taxe de luxe of about 25 per cent. It is thus that a bottle of champagne, which has left Rheims at the price of eighteen francs, has arrived to the purchaser in the night café of Montmartre at about ninety. One has the sympathy with the grower. In fact, there is not anyone has so much sympathy with him as the Parisian who has to conduct a party round the Butte, where the champagne is de rigueur. But one cannot do much for him if it must involve the purchase of bottles at ninety francs per time. Of course, such figures are not for the Marne champagne, which is the champagne of the deuxième région. But it has been just because the champagne of the second-class has been so expensively priced, through the profiteers and the luxury-tax, that one has thought it would be better, when compelled to take at all, to pay the few extra francs for the premières marques. And so the champagne of the Marne does remain in the Marne, where it does come to be regarded as so much nuisance.

BUT it does come to be made clear that to drink the champagne, and the more expensive of the red and the white wines, does cease to be the habit. Except on the exceptionalest occasions. And then, of course, the good wine does flow as in the bon vieux temps de jadis. One has seen such at the réouverture of the Café de la Rotonde in Montparnasse, when the artists have covered up the nice new wallpaper with the incomprehensible canvases. One has heard that they have not been pleased with the washing and the redecoration of the old café. They are said to have preferred it as it was when it used to be the headquarters of Trotsky—in his more human days. Although there shall not in the future be the necessity to sit on the laps of one another for the lack of the space, they are not pleased with the Americanisation by the "grill-room" But still they have consumed uncomplainingly the unrestricted quantities of the champagne which the management has accorded for the celebration. And have even smashed the crockery, which is a favourite method to express the delight.

THE SNEAK THIEF

A PARABLE BY HILDA BRIGHTEN

THERE was once a woman, and she had a picture. We will call it the Apollo Belvedere; as good a name as another. She thought this picture was the most beautiful in the world. It was not quite that, but her faith and love for it had made it very nearly lovely.

She adored it. More, she foolishly reverenced it. It became something almost sacred. It meant so much to her that she drifted into a fatal error . . . she ceased to talk of it. She imagined that the world, too, must see the beauty of the thing, and that lip praise would be superfluous, and belittling.

She was an idealistic and stupid woman. But she was more foolish with regard to the picture itself. She ceased to tell the picture how wondrous she thought it. And the picture, being less idealistic than the woman, did not understand. It wanted words. And words, the woman thought, would sully the thing she loved. Her adoration was bigger than utterance. It was herself, her heart, her soul.

It was not that she was inarticulate. But words to her seemed a poor, insufficient medium. In effect belittling rather than aggrandising the thing she loved. And so she was silent. And in a fool's paradise, with her picture, that was beyond human frailty.

She was, indeed, a foolish woman! So foolish that she did not realise jealousy or temptation. So, instead of locking up her picture in safety, where she alone might enjoy it, she hung it up for the public gaze. For, she reasoned, the world must be better for looking straight at beauty, and still better when beauty was allied to virtue. And to her, the Apollo Belvedere became incomparable.

Then there came a thief. Not a real burgling thief. The woman was not a coward, she could have fought a big open fight to a fatal finish. But the thief was not that kind, she was just a Sneak Thief. And she stole the Apollo Belvedere. And it killed the woman. Not a mortal death. That would not have mattered, for that way lies peace. But it killed her heart, and her brain. And nearly it killed her soul. It was a cancerous, torturous living death.

The Sneak Thief took the picture, and hung it up. And was flattered by obtaining this prized work of art. And she said she loved it . . . perhaps she did. Perhaps she had not heard (or, hearing, had not understood) the words, "lust of gain, thirst of possession, vanity of achievement." And the Apollo Belvedere knew he must be wonderful, for two women wanted him.

The Sneak Thief looked every day at the picture and was delighted. Then one day it entered her head that by touching it up she might still further enhance its beauty. And so, very carefully, she started to apply her art. Very gently, she put tiny lines of coarseness round the eyes, tiny lines of grossness round the mouth, a little touch of bitterness at the heart, which made a look of disillusion appear in the picture's eyes. She went about her work very delicately, very deftly. Then she stood back and studied what she had done. She thought it a great improvement, and considered herself a consummate artist.

She continued with her work, and skilfully she touched the waistline. She did not exactly alter it, in effect. She merely added a stroke . . . but that stroke suggested sensuality. For a long time the alteration was scarcely noticeable. But the Sneak Thief persevered.

Till suddenly the Apollo Belvedere had grown less fine. Coarser . . . not even that. But if you can use the phrase, less innocent, less clean-looking. The picture was still beautiful, but now merely with the beauty of an animal. But the Sneak Thief was delighted with her possession. Still emphatic in her desire to improve it, she added many coats of the poison paint of flattery. And the Apollo Belvedere, as a picture of beauty, was ended.

(All rights strictly reserved)

Perhaps the world noticed the difference. If it did it only smiled . . . or sneered. It was not very interested. If the woman could have seen . . . well, even she could not have suffered much more. There are not comparative degrees of broken heart.

One day, long, long afterwards, the Apollo Belvedere caught a glimpse of himself in a mirror hanging opposite. He had not looked at himself lately, or, if he had, only through the eyes of the Sneak Thief. The glimpse shocked him. There was something wrong. What was it? It puzzled him, and he brooded. He did not know that broken ideals can mark an effect.

At first he was merely dissatisfied, then he began to worry, and the Sneak Thief continued, and increased her coats of poison paint. But the Apollo Belvedere grew more dissatisfied, and then one day it dawned on him that the Sneak Thief had subtly destroyed the beautiful work of years, and that the Apollo Belvedere was nothing but another Lost Ideal.

And there started to haunt him hatred, and a desire for revenge. Revenge that at the same time might bring annihilation. He reflected that he, too, might be subtle. He was sickened and tired of himself. For he had still retained a little of his soul, and he did not like imperfect things. He thought and thought; and all the time degeneration gnawed and sapped his spirit.

Then an inspiration caught him, and pointed to an opportunity. One day, while gazing into the big, blue, child-like eyes of the Sneak Thief, he decided to wriggle himself free from the hook on which he hung, fall forward, and with his weight crush the Sneak Thief. Self destruction seemed a small price for his vengeance.

Three days later, with a paint brush, and a new and more insiduous paint, the Sneak Thief stood again before the picture. But as she stretched her hand to her work, the Apollo Belvedere shivered and fell forward. But the Sneak Thief sprang quickly to one side and was untouched, while the Apollo Belvedere, striking against an obstacle of no importance, rent his canvas in two.

"THE SNEAK THIEF" (concluded)

The Sneak Thief looked down with surprise and a little sorrow, and said, "What a pity my pretty picture is spoilt," adding in quick self-comfort, "never mind, it was getting a little old, and I would rather like another; one of Hercules, or Mercury, or even . . . "

Just then a young man passed. He was not a Hercules, or a Mercury. Just an ordinary young man. But the Sneak Thief ran to him and stopped him. And with her large, child-like blue eyes, gazed up at him. And she said, "Oh, young man, I am so glad you passed this way. For I am only a woman, and so lonely, and helpless. For I know nothing of life, and its sophistications. I have not even the usual art of graceful walking or beautiful and attractive speech. I am a child, helpless and misunderstood by a hard, cruel world, and oh, so lonely! Won't you, in your manly strength, guide me? With you I might learn so much. You are so wise, so strong, so clever. With you I should feel safe at last."

And the ordinary young man felt flattered and drew himself up. Here was a woman, he thought, who had discovered at a glance all the real truth, so many, so near him, had entirely missed.

And he looked down at the Sneak Thief, and said, "All that you say is true. I will shield you and protect, and teach you, there is much to learn. Let us start at once. But how shall I begin to aid you?"

And the Sneak Thief looked up into the face of the ordinary young man with her large, blue, child-like eyes and said . . . . "First of all will you please help me to move an old picture which has fallen down, and which is in my way?" HILDA BRIGHTEN

IN ENGLAND-NOW!

A WEEKLY LETTER FROM

Blanchette

ILLUSTRATED BY HELEN McKIE

LONDON, January 9

DEAR COUSIN—

RATHER marking time we seem to have been somehow, this last week or so, with not a fearful lot that's exciting going on (except murder mysteries, and things), and a sort of after-the-holidays feeling about everything. And still some traces clinging to us of the "turn of the year," and the celebrations which are (rightly, of course) deemed to be its due.

卐 卐

STILL, for instance, if you go out to tea with a household where they've got the excuse of even just a single offspring to be amused, you may hear very odd sort of noises as you approach the drawing-room. And find there some perfectly good railway lines laid all over the carpet and tired-looking trains travelling over 'em—about the rate of the best kind of after-War suburban ones, you know. And quite grown-up children quite prepared to show us again and again "how they work." Still, too, strange beasts that Noah never dreamt of make fearful sounds at unexpected moments, and little celluloid creatures of bright and varied hue are mysteriously discovered floating in one's bath . . .

卐 卐

AND not quite died down yet, either, our (as usual) p'raps rather superior comments and controversies about the new honours that have (as usual) somehow fallen mostly to the lot of ex-mayors and butter merchants and people "for their services to the country"—not to mention any such mere paltry matter as contributions to the party funds and all that sort of thing.

"New honours that have fallen on the ex-mayors and butter merchants"

卐 卐

IS not it a joy to think that at last Sir Gerald and Sir Charles have got the recognition they have so long merited, as the leader-writers would say? Though, while they were about it, why not also, I wonder, Sir Cyril? True, darling Mr. Maude mayn't ever have sent wonderful big cheques to charity or swum the Channel or walked a tightrope, or anything exciting like that. But still, he does rather represent the stage, doesn't he, not to mention Eton and all that sort of thing? And did quite a lot of propaganda and things in the U.S.A. pendant la guerre, too.

"Said she having just paid her income tax"

卐 卐

AND, by the way, while we are about it as afore-said, why not, oh please, why not Sir Owen Nares? And Sir Oscar Asche? And Sir Godfrey Tearle? And Sir Nelson Keys? After all, they're all almost as serious dramatists, I mean, actors, as Sir Charles, or any of our other theatre Knights. Sir Owen . . . for whom every right-minded flapper schwärms. Sir Oscar . . . the idol of all of us who love great big strong men with great big muscular chests (on view nightly and at matinées, no extra charge). Sir Godfrey . . . the most fascinating of lovers. And Sir Nelson . . . quite the cleverest and most lovable little comedian on the stage.

卐 卐

TALKING about dramatists, though, it is rather odd, isn't it? that the people who act get their look-in all right, but somehow the ones who write hardly ever seem to slip into the list—even when it's plays they do. How about Sir Somerset Maugham, Sir John Galsworthy, Sir John Drinkwater, and Sir Walter de la Mare next time . . . instead of a few of the retired railway magnates and margarine millionaires? Though no honours list's ever really properly complete till you know who's refused titles as well as who's accepted 'em, what?

"IN ENGLAND—NOW!" (concluded)

Do seem now, though—to go back to what I was really talking about—to be in for a general shake-up and revival of all sorts of activities, we do here in London now. Not merely in the social way, either, I mean. Once more that General Election cry's began to go round, and they even do talk about its going to happen before the end of this very month as ever is. Though that would be some hustling, wouldn't it? for our politicians-in-chief now gaily sunning themselves on the Riviera or busily skating and ski-ing and getting photographed at St. Moritz.

卐 卐

WOULD be more absorbing even than Ireland, wouldn't it? and put into the background—'cept, of course, for election purposes—such thrilling topics as how to tame Sinn Feiners and Ulsterites all at once, and Lord Curzon's woes and worries in Egypt, and all the trouble about France wanting ten thousand (or is it million?) more tons of submarines than her share. Greatest sensation we've had since the . . . yes, I will mention it again just for once, though it's so out of fashion . . . the Great War.

卐 卐

EVEN the German bands have come back, by the way (not to mention the superior kind of Hun music-makers who play indoors)—so it must have happened a very, very long while ago. Just a few of us still remember it, but we try and remember it in silence now if we can, even at this, the most memory-raising time of the year.

"Saw 1922 in at the Hyde Park Hotel"

THINGS social, too, begin to revive a bit from now on, even if many of us are still abroad or in the country (where hunt and county balls are right at the top of their swing), and the Court won't be back (bar accidents) till the end of the month. And hardly are our New Year revels over—perfectly lovely dance and supper it was that saw 1922 in at the Hyde Park, by the way—when the round of big dances for charities and things has started in again.

"The Chelsea Arts Ball"

卐 卐

AND less than a month from now—Feb. 8, to be exact—there's to be the super-revel of the year in the shape of the Chelsea Arts Ball, which you can always feel quite sure'll be a red-hot success, even if all the other shows are a frost. This time it's to be a "Brighter London a Hundred Years Hence" ball—which sounds very nice and pleasant. But it doesn't really matter much what you call a dance, does it? Point is that at this one all the cheerful people in London roll up, and anyone who does arrive feeling a bit gloomylike will probably be found, by the end of the night (or morning), dancing—

The nine-step, the ten-step, the eleven-step—

(or more) as the fascinating Widow Twankey sings in that brightest of pantomimes, Aladdin, at the Palladium.

卐 卐

WHICH, by way of contrast, I assimilated (as the patent food ads. say) one day last week within a few hours of that oh-so-different kind of fantasy, Prunella, at the Everyman Theatre, in Hampstead. Exquisite always, even on this rather tiny stage, is the half-whimsical, half-tragic little episode of Pierrot and Pierrette, with its haunting lines about—

"Little bird in your nest—
Are you there? Are you there?"

A little gem in a bandbox. But the panto. in the great big Palladium, with Lorna and Toots Pounds and the rest gaily and tunefully bouncing about, has its own rich and rollicking delights, too.

卐 卐

IT takes all sorts to make a world, on the boards and off, doesn't it?

With love, yours ever, BLANCHETTE

HUNTING WITH

Mrs. Evans and Capt. J. F. A. Lewis hound

A Check

At the moment of writing the countryside is in the grip of a severe frost, and hunting is suspended almost everywhere. Well, we cannot grumble. Up to the time of this check it was a very open winter, only an occasional day having been lost through frost or fog since the start of the season. The quality of the sport has been curiously varied, for while you hear complaints of bad scent and unfavourable conditions in practically every hunting country, the fact remains that there have been plenty of first-class days. Just before the frost the Pytchley were in great form following their meet at Scaldwell. The pace of their gallop from Old Poors Gorse was something to be remembered. It was a regular steeplechase for half an hour, well calculated to test the mettle of the best of the Pytchley horses.

The Bicester

Some excellent sport was seen with the Bicester after Christmas, including a seven-mile point which will compare well with many of the best achievements of the season. I can readily understand that the Bicester people are dismayed at the prospect of losing the services of their Master, Major J. P. Heywood-Lonsdale. For twenty three seasons they have been fortunate in enjoying his tactful and popular leadership, and everybody recognises that it will not be easy adequately to fill the gap which is caused by his resignation. Prince Henry is among those who have ridden fairly frequently with the Bicester this season. He takes his own line and goes markedly well. Few countries in these days can boast of being as free from wire as the Bicester, which carries a good scent as a rule, and is a decidedly pleasant hunting region.

Coming Changes

This is the time of the year when many Hunt Committees find themselves under the necessity of looking for new M.F.H.'s. It is inevitable that there should be a certain number of changes every season, and no alarm need be occasioned if the present list of resignations begins to assume formidable dimensions. A year ago we were wondering where all the new Masters were to come from. But practically every vacancy was satisfactorily filled before the close of the season, and so it has been all through the history of foxhunting. Not far short of a century has elapsed since "Nimrod" infused considerable gloom into one of his articles because several of the big countries in the Midlands happened to fall vacant simultaneously. He thought it portended the approaching doom of the sport.

Still Going Strong

A famous huntsman once said that "canals would be the ruin of hunting," and pessimism was rampant when railways stretched their tentacles in every direction. But hunting has had many more serious difficulties than these to contend with, and looks like surviving them all for many a long year. A problem to be faced in the immediate future is the bad times which have fallen upon agriculturists. Dwindling prices and the high cost of labour are a source of considerable anxiety to farmers, and it behoves hunting people to be more than ever careful to avoid aggravating the trouble. Crops are very forward this season, and every precaution should be taken not to damage maiden seeds and wheat. One practical manner in which fox-hunters can help is to make a point

Vacant Countries

Among resignations recently announced are those of Mr. W. B. Danby and Lord Charles Bentinck in the Burton country, where the latter is huntsman as well as Master. There are some great fox-hunting names on the roll of Burton M.F.H.'s, notably Assheton Smith, Lord Henry Bentinck, and Lord Chaplin. They ruled, however, before the time when the Burton country was split up and the Blankney came into existence. Sir William Austin is giving up the Suffolk pack, while Mr. George Fitzwilliam, who for so many years has carried on the traditions of his family in the Milton country, is losing his partner in the Mastership, Mr. Stanley Brotherhood. Overheard at the Meet

At a recent town-meet of the Essex and Suffolk pack I overheard one of those big-throated, blundering busybodies telling adjacent friends just what really happened after hounds got into open country. "Of course, I've hunted a good bit," he said, "and to tell you the truth there isn't much in it. You see, all that happens is, that when they get out into the open fields the Master lets the fox out of a bag, and they run after it." I should imagine he was one of those ardent followers who hunt on a bicycle, heavily spurred, and wearing a pink tie.

RACING NOTIONS

BY "CARBINE"

A Curious Record

"CUB" KENNEDY firmly believed that in Milesius he had bred another Tetrarch. "What will you take for him?" he was repeatedly asked after Milesius's success at Ascot. "I'm not selling," said that mercurial Irishman. Even offers up to £20,000 were declined. Mr. Kennedy believed it would be worth his while to keep the colt for service at his stud farm. Imagine his keen disappointment, then, when Milesius developed a will of his own and declined to do his best on the racecourse. The grey had a shocking career on the flat as a three-year-old, and was, apparently, not worth a twentieth part of the sum that he would have commanded at one time. His victory at Kempton Park over Senhora and others placed him in a new light. A course of hurdle-racing might easily make him a reformed character.

Congratulations

I HOPE I am not too late to offer my congratulations to Sir James Buchanan, Mr. Joseph Watson, and Mr. Francis Willey upon their New Year honours. They are all good supporters of racing, particularly Sir James, to whom the Turf owes much for his generous support for a quarter of a century. His luck in racing has never been quite commensurate with the great efforts he has made to breed or buy horses of the best stamp, though Epsom Lad did him some good turns many years ago. I think the best horse Sir J. Buchanan ever had was Hurry On. It was a pity he was running during the grim War years. For that reason the performances of this undefeated horse have never quite received the credit to which they were entitled.

Manton's Owner

MR. JOSEPH WATSON is one of the latest meteors of the Turf. Not many racing people had heard of him when he bought up the Manton training establishment and the surrounding farms, and it was a relief to know that Alec Taylor was to continue there as his tenant. Then the trainer bought yearlings for his new landlord, and you know the notable success which attended those purchases when the test of the racecourse was applied. Love-in-Idleness and Lemonora were among them, winners respectively of the Oaks and the Grand Prix. Not a bad start, eh? The new peer will breed most of his own racehorses in future. Mr. Francis Willey is the father of Colonel F. V. Willey, the Master of the Blankney Hounds, and both are sportsmen of the best type.

Spring Entries

A SLACK time in National Hunt sport has given us ample time to discuss the entries for the spring handicaps. In point of numbers they do not fall below expectations. All the horses we looked for in these races have been duly engaged, and there is no reason why the events should not prove of average interest. By the way, "The Tout's" page of pictures in this issue will raise many a smile. George Poole he has caught to the life. This young trainer is still going great guns, and hopes to show us that Shaun Spadah can win another Grand National.

At Hurst Park

WEATHER permitting, Hurst Park will probably give us the best racing of the present week. On Friday the New Year Hurdle Handicap looks like bringing out a good field, and if White Heat is pulled out under his big weight it will be a very attractive affair. He has an excellent chance for all his burden. A good second string is A.A., who was travelling well when he fell at Kempton Park recently. On the second day the chief event will be the Mitre Steeplechase, in which Shaun Spadah may make his first appearance this season. I make Garryvoe my selection.

Sports & Pastimes

DANGER IN SPORT

A Fantastic Proposition

In a recent issue of a contemporary, Mr. A. E. Crawley discusses the question what are the most dangerous games and sports, and gives a list of a dozen games and sports in their order of danger. It will probably be news to a good many people that bob-sleighing on an ice-run is (according to Mr. Crawley) the most dangerous sport in the world, and that tobogganing comes second. But the real surprise occurs when we come to the third place which is allocated to hockey. In other words Mr. Crawley would have us believe that hockey is the most dangerous of all ball games.

What is Meant by "Dangerous"?

In support of this proposition, which is so fantastic that it is difficult to take it seriously, Mr. Crawley advances very little in the way of argument, and what there is of it is futile. He talks, for instance, about hockey being dangerous "when badly played." But why should a game be visited with the sins of those who do not know how to play it? Is swimming to be blamed if a bather who cannot swim happens to get drowned? Then, again, Mr. Crawley's definition of "dangerous" seems to be a peculiar one. He says that "for bruises on leg and ankle, body bumps and face-slicing" (whatever that my be), hockey is the most dangerous of games. I doubt very much whether injuries of this type occur more frequently in hockey than in football or cricket, but even assuming that they do is the dangerousness of a game to be measured by its "bumps and bruises"? Surely when you talk of a game as being dangerous you mean that it involves a risk of disablement which, even though temporary, lasts for an appreciable time. Such risks are undoubtedly incurred more often in football (both Rugby and Association) than in hockey.

Flights of Fancy

It is a well-known fact that men who for business and family reasons cannot afford to risk getting "crocked" play hockey in preference to football. This is in itself a sufficient indication which is the more dangerous game, in the accepted sense of the term.

Barber, Lieut.-Col. C. G. Liddell, Lieut.-Col. P. Neame

Again, hockey is a game which women are able to play quite well, but football, because of its roughness and danger, is wholly unsuited to them. Mr. Crawley's flights of fancy cannot, in short, prevail against hard facts.

Golfing Dangers

WHETHER the Committee of the Royal and Ancient Club will appreciate the compliment paid to golf by including it in the list is a moot point. It manages to squeeze into the last place next below lawn tennis; but I am sorely afraid that if you spoke of golf as a dangerous game to a cricketer or a footballer—or even to a golfer—he would burst out laughing.

SCHOOLBOY CHAMPIONSHIPS

The Headmasters' "No"

THE Headmasters have probably made themselves very unpopular in certain quarters by deciding, as they did at their conference last week, against any increase in the number of school championships. Yet to those who realise the duties and responsibilities which are involved in a Headmaster's job the decision will hardly come as a surprise. It was evoked by a proposal emanating from the Achilles Club to hold a Public Schools' Relay Race in London in the spring, which was supported by Mr. B. G. D. Rudd, the eminent Oxford athlete, who attended the conference as an emissary of the club.

RUGGER AT RICHMOND

The Old Deer Park at Richmond last week was the scene of much interesting play, and augurs well for the future of our Rugby. We picture a mid-field struggle between a Rugby and Cheltenham combination and a fifteen from other public schools, who were defeated by eleven points to three

A Weak Case

WHEN asked what particular object the Club had in view in wishing to promote such a race, Mr. Rudd could only say that it was hoped thereby to assist in raising the standard of English athletics at the Olympic Games and in other International encounters. Headmasters can hardly be blamed for refusing to treat such an object as one of paramount importance in the education of a schoolboy. They are fully aware of the value of sport as part of a boy's education, but their main object is to teach him how to become a healthy and useful citizen rather than a winner of international championships.

Evils of "Limelight"

MOREOVER, we cannot ignore the emphasis laid by one headmaster after another on the evils of publicity—of allowing boys to be so much in the limelight that they come to attach less importance to what they can do than to the notoriety which they achieve by doing it, with the further consequence that they soon come to regard winning as the only thing that matters—a most deplorable state of mind for a young athlete.

Exploded Fallacies

APART from all this one cannot help wondering whether the Achilles Club's plan, even if the headmasters had smiled upon it, would have achieved the wonderful things that were expected of it. The belief that the institution of championships necessarily leads to the production of champions is one that was exploded long ago. Another thing which is extremely doubtful is whether in the long run you produce the best athletes by catching them young and subjecting them to a sort of intensive training instead of allowing them to come to maturity in the ordinary course of nature. Have we not had of late several instances in sport of boy phenomena who have gone off instead of training on? H. S. S.

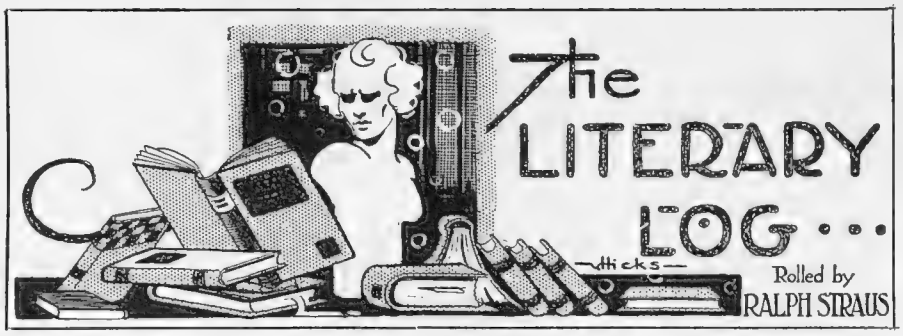
"BLACK & WHITE"

The Largest Stocks of old matured Scotch Malt Whisky are held by James Buchanan & Co. Ltd. and Associated Companies, which enables them to maintain their pre-War standard of age and quality.



ONE of the most unusual first novels of recent years was Mr. Norman Davey's The Pilgrim of a Smile. It was a difficult book to follow, even by a man like Davey, who is a scholar, a poet, and—of all unlikely things in the world—an expert in gas-turbines, whatever they may be. And Guinea Girl (Chapman and Hall: 8*s*. 6*d*. net) is not the little masterpiece which many people considered its predecessor to be. For all that it is a most likeable book, with a French lady, not of the monde, who plays at being a Countess, and a young and not too virile Englishman, who plays at being her husband, for the protagonists.

THE story is light enough. Paul Bellamy, after finishing a not too glorious career in the Army, has little enough to do, and when the story proper opens is doing it at Monte Carlo. Mademoiselle Yvonne Quesnoy is very beautiful, and, according to a waiter who knows such things—what waiter doesn't?—elle cherche sa fortune. With a little help from Paul, she scoops in vast numbers of francs at the tables, and away the two go to a nice little southern spot, and pretend, as I have said, to be what they are not. All most amusing, particularly when they are found out. And it is quite right and proper that whereas the beautiful Yvonne marries the one man at all worthy to take such a prize, the backboneless Paul at the end of the book is repeating his adventure with somebody else not quite so chic as herself.

THE actual story, however, does not matter so much. It is Mr. Davey's style, his quaint pair of eyes which see things, and his pen which writes them down, in the purely Daveyan manner, and his almost swashbuckling, cosmopolitan air, which lifts up a somewhat commonplace tale high above most of its fellows. Mr. Davey might be as outrageous as he liked, and you would enjoy him, even though you happened to be—which, of course, you are not—the most respectable spinster ever born to sit on a Vigilance Committee. Time will show just what he can do. At the moment I fancy that he will make secure his reputation with the short story rather than with the novel, but about that we shall have to wait and see. Meanwhile he has two jolly books to his credit, to say nothing of that erudite work on gas-turbines.

IT is possible that Mr. Wilfrid Ewart's novel, Way of Revelation (Putnams: 7*s*. 6*d*. net), may prove to be the outstanding book of 1921. It is a big piece of work for a young man, not too familiar with his technique, to have done, and if Sonia had never been published, and Mr. Ewart's book had appeared at a time before most people had determined to forget the War, it would have created the most extraordinary sensation. As it is, Way of Revelation is a book of the greatest interest, and recreates a period which for all time will stand by itself. And yet, for all its vast canvas, it is possible that Mr. Ewart has covered too narrow a strip of ground. He is content to show but a small portion of London, that portion, indeed, which Mr. McKenna has aptly called the Sensationalists. True, his scenes of a war-swept France are unforgettable, as are also the scenes of gilded fashion at home, but there is little enough of those humbler folk, whose lives during the War altered to so inconceivable an extent.

THE chief character is one Sir Adrian Knoyle, a Guardsman (like his author), whose life during those five years is a double hell. The Lady Rosemary Meynell, with whom he is for so long in love, is charming, no doubt, but she is not of the stuff of which your true heroines are made. And yet, I suppose, Knoyle himself is not the real hero of the book. It is his friend, Eric Sinclair, who occupies that position, the do-nothing Eric who, when war comes over the horizon, shows what can be done by a man with a sense of duty.

TAKEN as a mere story, then, this first novel is unusually good. Taken as an interpretation of London society in wartime it is little short of amazing. There are queer little tricks of style, not all of them likeable, from which Mr. Ewart's future books will probably be free; and it may be that he could have made several cuts with advantage. Nevertheless, Way of Revelation is a big thing, perhaps the biggest thing of its particular kind which has yet appeared, and, shining through its five hundred pages is a true artist's vision and power. OBITUARY

Mr. Claude Shepperson, A.R.A.

WE very much regret to record the death of that well-known artist, Mr. Claude Shepperson, A.R.A., whose black-and-white and water-colour work had become such a favourite feature of contemporary periodicals. After only three weeks' illness he died at his house in Mulberry Walk, Chelsea. He was fifty-four years of age. Educated privately, he was intended for the law, but determined instead to study art, and he worked for some years in Paris and London. His early work showed a keen appreciation of landscape beauty, which he interpreted with effective and broad treatment. His later work, illustrating principally some amusing phases of London life, was still greatly influenced by his strong appreciation of decoration and movement. Perhaps the last work from his brush was reproduced in Pears' Annual, a striking piece of colour work, entitled "Scheherazade."

Motoring & Aviation

ONE would have thought that respectable town councillors would never dream of trying to bluff the motoring public, yet the Automobile Association discovered recently that at Newport, Salop, ten mile speed limit signs had been erected on all approaches to this town. Upon enquiry it was ascertained that these were entirely unauthorised by the Ministry of Transport. Consequently, the A.A. called that bluff, and now the signs have been removed. Bravo! A.A., and I fancy there are a few more signs of a similar character erected on the roadsides that ought to share the same fate. Motorists might help the A.A. by drawing their attention to doubtful "warnings" when they come across them in the course of their travels. Also, as this is somewhat a slack time of year, a little correspondence would help to brighten things up a bit. Which reminds me that the A.A. has offered £1 reward for information leading to the recovery of the Pyrene fire extinguisher some ruffian has "pinched" from the A.A. roadside telephone box at Ashtead, Surrey. The extinguisher carries the letters A.A. upon it, though I expect the purloiner has long ago effaced those from its case. Anyway it was a dirty trick, as this fire appliance is kept there in case of need, should a car get on fire, and I hope the taker will get well burnt in——well, in hereafter.

MR. LESLIE WALTON, the chairman of the Vauxhall Motor Company, has set a new fashion in motor-carriages in his special type of limousine that his 25 h.p. Vauxhall is fitted with. It is a closed carriage with an "aeroplane view," which, translated, means that its incurved sides and narrow roof give the passengers the maximum range of view it is possible to get in a car having a permanent top. During lovely weather, such as we have been having lately, ladies do prefer the closed type of carriage for use all the year round, as it makes heavy wraps unnecessary in winter, keeps the dust away, and the glare of the sun in summer. This "Windsor" limousine, which is depicted here, the horizontally sliding windows and abundance of light give all the advantages of the open car and none of its inconveniences, while the occupants can get as much fresh air as they wish at the same time, albeit under their own control. 'Fon my word, 1922 is starting well with this Vauxhall novelty.

MR. W. THEODORE CARR, M.P., is lecturing on Saturday next, January 14, to the members and friends of the Cumberland County Motor-Cycling Club at the Crown and Mitre Hotel, Carlisle. Mr. Carr intends to discourse on "Motoring, Ancient and Modern," and, as his lecture will be illustrated by interesting lantern slides, it should draw a very full "house," especially as all motorists, whether car-owners or cycle-owners, are cordially invited to attend the lecture. Mr. T. W. Loughborough, the Secretary of the A.C.U., is to occupy the chair. Which reminds me that the Auto-Cycle Union are to hold their second trial of standard stock motor-cycles on Wednesday, March 15. Representatives of the A.C.U. attend the motor-cycle makers' works, pick out at hazard machines from stock, and these are sealed and run in the trial, so as to demonstrate that the machines the public buy are identical with those taking part in the trial. Quite a good egg in these days of special racing machines and "concert pitch" tuning.

MOTORING has been honoured in the New Year's List by the baronetcy conferred on Sir Alfred Bird, M.P., and the K.B.E. on Mr, William Malesbury Letts, C.B.E., who now becomes "Sir Billy." Sir Alfred Bird supported motoring in its early days when it most needed it by buying cars when most folk called them "stink pots." Billy Letts deserted driving horses one fine morning to pilot a car down to Holborn Viaduct when the Great Horseless Carriage Company was first started. He had to sit up all the previous night to learn how this mechanical "horse" worked, which shows that courage in tackling unknown difficulties has made him the successful business man he is to-day, managing director of Crossley Motors, Ltd., of Willys-Overland Crossley, Ltd., and of Chas. Jarrott and Letts, Ltd.

THOUGH flying is steadily progressing, there is a fading away of public interest, due, no doubt, to the generally accepted idea that it's as simple as riding in a tramcar. Anyway, now the Royal Air Force Club has opened the doors of its new premises at 128, Piccadilly, the pilots and observers can gather round the cheerful fire and discuss stunts and other technical points. The new building and its equipment is well worthy of this rising Force, and as a founder-member of the older Royal Aero Club, I wish the new Club long life and ever-increasing prosperity.

The Woman who dares

ANYBODY can wear shoes, but to wear boots requires a woman of character. The decision once made, it is, however, astonishing what freedom in walking, comfortable support and warmth these Lotus Boots give to the ankle. The upper leathers are of finest Patna kid and are as soft and yielding as gloves. No wonder the people in the inner circle of fashion attach so much importance to the wearing of Lotus boots in winter. It is a criterion of all that is of the most "chic." These 825's give tone to a woman's outdoor costume.

Resolved!

I will get back my health and nerve power by taking——— SANATOGEN regularly!

New Health and Nerve Power

Make the above resolution to-day and keep it.

"My health benefits by every packet of Sanatogen I take," writes the famous war correspondent, Mr. A. G. Hales.

Madame Sarah Grand, the famous authoress, writes:

"Sanatogen has made a new person of me! I am able to enjoy both work and play again."

And Sanatogen will make a new person of you—you will look well, feel well, and be well—there is no doubt about that.

Readily digestible—even in acute illness—highly nourishing—rich in the essential nerve food—phosphorus—Sanatogen forms an ideal tonic nutriment, especially for those suffering from general debility, nervous exhaustion, digestive troubles, and ailments of the stomach and bowels.

SANATOGEN

(The True Tonic Food)

MADE BY GENATOSAN, LIMITED, ENGLAND.

Go now to your nearest Chemists, and get a supply of Sanatogen—prices from 2/3 to 10/9 per tin. Take two teaspoonsful twice a day for a few weeks, and note the wonderful improvement in your health.

Scientifically Heated Homes

The modern way—the truly scientific way of heating any residence is by means of a central system. The heart of such a system is undoubtedly the boiler, and, provided the radiators and supply pipes are well and artistically placed, a central system of heating is far more efficient and economical than any other method.

JOHN BULL BOILERS

Have been used for a great number of years to centrally heat large or small town and country houses, churches, public buildings, etc. They have been found so trustworthy and such time and labour savers, to say nothing of the added comfort they afford, that no other heating system could now replace them.

Schemes prepared and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars.

HALLS AND STAIRCASES

BY MRS. M. VINCE

IN most London houses the hall is a real problem, for it is little more than a passage, and often a very ill-lighted passage. Yet one likes to have a pleasant hall, for it is from the hall that one takes one's first impressions of the house. How are we to make the most of these rather dismal passages which are all the architect has been able, in so many cases, to give us? To make it pleasant and habitable it is not enough to have "Welcome" or "Salve" on the mat.

THE first need is light. The upper panels of the front door should be glass with a grille outside. It should be tinted glass which prevents people from looking through, while taking away only the minimum of light. Some people deliberately deprive themselves of light which they might have by using coloured glass, or, which is still more absurd, by putting up curtains over the glass panels. Besides the glass panels in the door there is the "fanlight" above it. Most houses are content with a square of glass and the number painted on it. Yet this little window can so easily be a beautiful thing. Anyone can see at a glance what a difference a beautiful fanlight makes to the appearance of the front of a house and of his first impression of it, by looking at some of the old doors of the Bloomsbury houses

THESE passage-halls in London houses are too small for anything to be done with them by means of furniture. They will barely take the minimum, a hat-rack and umbrella-stand and a solitary chair. These should be as simple and unobtrusive as possible. Since there is no room for furniture, the only way in which you can make your hall distinctive is by the choice of coverings for the walls, the floor and the stairs. Wood-block flooring with rugs is the best way of doing the floor.

WITH regard to the walls, two important points have to be remembered. The first is that if the halls and stairs are not very light, those colours should be used which reflect the light instead of absorbing it. The second point is that in choosing a paper for the hall, you must remember that you are choosing it for the whole of the staircase, that is to say, for a much greater wall area than there is in even the largest rooms, and also that it will go to a much greater height than the wall of any room. For that last reason a paper which would look well in a room may not look well on a staircase. The monotonous repetition of a pattern becomes worse on a staircase than in a room, simply because of the greater height. I have been in one house where the wallpaper in the hall consisted chiefly of purple birds with green tail-feathers, and the ugliness of that paper grew and grew as one looked up from single specimens to whole flights of those green and purple monstrosities. On the other hand, there are wallpapers which look better the higher they go. These are the kind to choose for halls and staircases.

PERSONALLY, I think it is better still to have no paper at all, but to have a good bold dado-rail, four feet up the wall, and to paint this rail, the wall below it, and the skirting-board a soft green or a warm brown—cream should be avoided as being so light that it soils very quickly—and to paint the wall above a lighter shade of the same colour. This is one of the simplest and most satisfactory ways of doing the hall and staircase.

LASTLY there is the stair-carpet. If there is one thing in the house on which it is false economy to save money, it is on the stair-carpet. It has so much wear that it is wisest to have the very best. Nothing looks nicer than a plain carpet with a border in a darker shade, but plain carpets, one has to remember, show the tread and dirt more than patterned carpets. Again, if the walls are painted, as I have suggested, a plain colour, green or brown, the stair-carpet should not be plain. Stained wooden stair-rods are a fairly recent innovation and a great gain. They look just as well as brass rods, and they save a great deal of labour, for they have only to be dusted, and for that they need not even be taken out.

UNPROMISING material as such a narrow hall is, you will find that if you can get sufficient light into it, keep the walls a light colour, and have a good stair-carpet, you will have done enough to make it a pleasant and dignified entrance to your house. M. V.

La Mode Sanctions the Mingling of Materials

THIS is a fact that should be kept well before the eyes just now, with remnants and short lengths bombarding us from every side. All the same, it is just as well to have a definite scheme in view, and, by way of providing a text, there is a modish example of something very much le dernier cri in evening frocks pictured that conform to this decree.

A faille skirt and a lace corsage comes as a welcome change to creations fashioned all of one material, and there are signs and portents of some very big developments on these lines. Do you know a certain lace that looks like frosted snow? It is one of those modern dentelles of silk and metal threads, and has a singularly rich and beautiful appearance. Well, that is requisitioned for the corsage illustrated, in conjunction with a jupe of sea-green faille, shot with a silver bloom.

A BECOMING MODEL

For the corsage of this frock a lace that appears very like frosted snow is requisitioned with a jupe of sea-green faille shot with silver bloom

Original sketch by Betty Nisbet

An Après-Midi Gown

OUR second original offering of an après-midi gown is effected in black marocain, a model replete with all that is latest and best in straight, simple silhouette, artistically relieved by cascaded side panels, surmounted by rosettes made of jade-green bébé ribbon. The chapeau, also, is distinctively novel, and shows the penchant prevailing for clever daring outline. These hats are variously built of velvet and satin, and their chic lies in a complete absence of any extraneous decorations.

Furniture and Furnishing Fabrics

WARING AND GILLOWS, 164-180, Oxford Street, are to the fore with many notable bargains, the reductions clearly indicating a firm determination to clear at a big sacrifice, and as this house has a reputation second to none for fine, exclusive taste and irreproachable value, a sale here is an opportunity no woman who is house-proud is likely to ignore.

Waring and Gillows household linens and damask is world-renowned, consequently their clearance of 500 all linen Irish damask tablecloths, 2 yds. by 2 yds., at 16*s.* 6*d.* provides another significant item, as also hemstitched fine longcloth sheets, 72 ins. by 3 yds., laundered ready for use, that have fallen from 27*s.* 6*d.* the pair to 18*s.* 9*d.*

A few antiques are included in the furniture, and these have been subjected to tempting reductions, a Sheraton inlaid half-circular card-table to £6 15*s.* and a fine Queen Anne oak hanging cupboard, 7 ft. 6 ins. high, with three rows of drawers, being marked down from £145 to £95 10*s.*

Model Suits and Gowns

WHERE all is so good it is almost invidious to particularise, but Marshall and Snelgrove, Oxford Street, carry such a big name for their smart coats and skirts and gowns it is tempting to give these precedence, although the same astounding value obtains in mantles, furs, millinery, blouses, and especially in ribbons and all the little toilette accessories that run away with such an inordinate amount of money at ordinary times.

At 8½ guineas there is an unparalleled choice in really good, up-to-date tailor-mades, a typical example of which is found in a coat of good quality velveteen allied to a box-pleated skirt of striped hopsack, an ideal spring suit. Velour suits, with the new long, full basqued coat, trimmed mole dyed coney in three different designs, costing 9½ guineas; while of similarly advanced character and style are the afternoon and evening gowns. Suitable to restaurant wear or useful for a thé dansant is a model silk georgette, daintily embroidered in gold or oxydised, only 7½ guineas. This is obtainable in navy, black, and a few good colours, another guinea securing a sweet evening frock fashioned of rich quality shot faille silk, the prettily scalloped skirt falling over a petticoat of lace. A representative example of the drastic treatment accorded original Paris models is found in a gown of black silk georgette, enhanced by the loveliest embroidery of fine diamanté, reduced from 85 to 30 guineas.

A Quality Sale

EVERY department at Woolland Bros. Knightsbridge, is brought under the ban of the blue pencil, and this bears more than ordinary significance, in that this firm offer only their own noted high-class goods. Nothing is added to this clearance, since the sole objective is to get rid of surplus stock that room may be made for fresh novelties.

Gloves and hosiery are always well worth following up here at sale time, for the reductions are drastic, and the value guaranteed. Articles in the made-up lace section likewise exacting the closest and earliest attention. Here there are beautiful lace and beaded tunics going for a mere song, together with much lovely lace by the yard, and remnant baskets full of covetable odd lengths so useful for trimming underwear, boudoir caps, and the like.

Famed for acquiring the pick of the Parisian model gowns, these never fail of proving a strong magnet at a Woolland sale. Exquisite creations, carrying the name of exclusive couturiers, that, having served their purpose, are marked down to give-away prices. There are, too, hundreds of smart coats and skirts, suitable to Town or country wear, together with sports skirts, all dropped to prices that make them available to the most modest of purses.

The Perm-Point Pencil

A neat pencil case in silver or gold makes an indispensable adjunct to the hand-bag of any woman or waistcoat pocket of any man. In these days of many business appointments and social engagements it is impossible, without the aid of a pencil to commit them to paper, to remember them. Perm-Point pencil cases are hand made by jewellers and sold only by jewellers in silver and gold, the former from 18*s.* 6*d.*, and the latter from 90*s.* The pencil leads need no sharpening, and they can be obtained from all jewellers or from Edward Baker and Son, 30 and 31 Augusta Street, Birmingham.

THE KNIGHT CLUB

PUNY PROFITEERING.

By H. DENNIS BRADLEY.

IT must be a thrilling experience to be charged with murder. But we live in crafty times, and experience only comes to the emotional few.

I have only been charged once . . . criminally, more or less. The case was published in most of the papers. But memories are short, and must often be refreshed, like stomachs.

In the early part of last year the firm of Pope and Bradley was charged with profiteering. Being the singular proprietor of this plural personality, I appeared, and defended my own case. It appealed to my ironical sense of humour.

The firm was charged with charging (which is immediately combative) eighteen guineas for a lounge suit. And it really did seem an awful lot. Conducting the case myself before a perfectly stupid Tribunal I proved conclusively that the net profit on this suit was 7*s.* 8*d.* But with British phlegm and asthma and mental astigmatism, they were unable to comprehend my simple mathematics. So they gave the case against me and ordered a refund of £2 2*s.*, saying they thought eighteen guineas was too high a price for any suit. I told them I was amazed at their decision and should appeal.

I took the case to the Court of Appeal at Spring Gardens, and, finding intelligence there, of course, I won. Had I not done so I should have taken the case to the House of Lords, or to heaven, or even to the more populated place.

The case was simple but illustrative.

At each hearing it took two and a half hours to prove. A chartered accountant proved the accounts. A woollen merchant proved the cost of the materials. A salesman proved the sale of the suit, and the West End log workers who made the garments proved the wages they were paid. The cost in time alone was collectively at least £100.

Since that date the finest quality materials are down 25 per cent., and West End log labour is down 10 per cent.

The prices of Pope and Bradley have been reduced accordingly, and they are still calculated on a bare margin of cost. There is no prospect of making more than a bare margin of profit at present. The spending capacity of the public to-day is limited. And until things recover this House is content to maintain production, keep its hundreds of employees at work, and forego its individual profits. SOME RECIPES FOR COOKING UP TURKEY

TURKEY SOUFFLÉ
CURRIED TURKEY
TURKEY MOULD
TURKEY À LA MILANAISE
DEVILLED TURKEY
A SAVOURY—SHRIMPS ON TOAST

Turkey Soufflé

POUND or put through a mincing machine 3 ozs. of the white meat of a turkey, and mix with it half a pint of milk, two eggs well-beaten, salt, pepper, and a pinch of cayenne and mace. Put the whole into a well-greased mould, tie it down with a cloth and steam it for thirty minutes. It must be kept upright, and when turned out in the entrée dish pour some well-seasoned brown gravy round, and serve with artichokes in white sauce.

Curried Turkey

Ingredients: 1 lb. of turkey, one large tablespoonful of curry powder, half a lemon, one good-sized onion, one apple, 1 oz. of margarine, one gill of milk. Mince the onion and apple and fry them thoroughly in the margarine, without browning. Add one dessertspoonful (a large one) of curry powder, and fry for a few minutes. Stir well, and add a gill of milk, a little chutney, and, if available, a little powdered cocoanut. Let the sauce cook gently for thirty minutes. Then rub through a strainer, put back into the stewpan, add the turkey cut up into dice, and simmer gently for another thirty minutes. Squeeze the juice of the lemon into the curry and serve with well-boiled rice.

Turkey Mould

Pour one pint of warm gravy or stock over 1 oz. of gelatine and leave for twenty minutes. Stir till dissolved, and pour into a mould. Boil three eggs hard, and cut into quarters. Cut 1 lb. of turkey into rather large dice, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and when the jelly in the mould is almost set, drop the turkey and the egg at intervals into it. Turn out when cold and serve with a mixed salad.

Turkey à la Milanaise

Boil ¼ lb. of macaroni in salted water for about thirty minutes. Cut up into small pieces 1 lb. of turkey, 4 ozs. of ham or tongue and the macaroni. Add one large tablespoonful of grated cheese. Melt ½ oz. of margarine in a stewpan, and stir one dessertspoonful of flour smoothly in. Add half a pint of milk and stir till thickened. Now add all the other ingredients. Season with salt and pepper and a grate of nutmeg, and simmer on the stove or in a casserole in the oven until heated through. Serve with brussels sprouts and potatoes baked in their skins.

Devilled Turkey

Divide the legs and make some incisions in them with a sharp knife. Season them with salt, pepper, cayenne, and lemon-juice. Spread a little butter or margarine over them, and broil over a clear fire, or under the gas deflector. Serve very hot.

Shrimps on Toast

Put threepennyworth of picked shrimps into a saucepan with a teaspoonful of white pepper, the juice of an orange, ½ oz. of butter, and a little nutmeg. Make the mixture very hot upon small squares of buttered toast.

Gibbs Ivory Castle Fairy Book

Teaches your children to want clean teeth

HAVE you noticed that happy, healthy, rollicking youngsters almost always have sound teeth? Do you know that sound teeth are usually the cause of good health—not merely the result of it?

To keep teeth sound they must be kept clean. How imperative, therefore, to teach children to want clean teeth!

Let them use Gibbs Dentifrice and you will have no trouble on that score. A few rubs of the toothbrush on the solid pink cake takes up exactly the amount of dentifrice required. A few rubs on the teeth in an up-and-down movement and presto! lovely, fragrant, sweet-tasting bubbles appear.

Readers of the Ivory Castle Fairy Book know that each bubble is the home of a number of little dainty Gibbs Fairies, who come out to fight the Caries Imps and Giant Decay. So the wonderful fairy game begins—a fairy game which leads to good health and the beauty of a perfect set of sound teeth.

Buy to-day for each member of your household his or her own tin of Gibbs Dentifrice—and Insist on Gibbs!
